Did you know that forest area in Thailand has declined from 42 percent to 31 percent since 1973?

When development occurs without the involvement of local communities natural resources are often mismanaged and depleted, contributing to climate change and causing large tracts of forests to shrink. The result is our forests are few and far between.

At the People & Forests Fair you will get to know the Bangkachao community and engage in conversation about the integrated upstream and downstream development strategies that the community utilizes in order to live sustainably within the forest. You will also get to learn more about the BIGTrees Project, an organization working to increase green spaces in the city, and RECOFTC – The Center for People and Forests, and organization which works to enhance the participation within all sectors of the Thai community to protect forest areas.

Come together to support the communities in People & Forests Fair. Cheer them on in the fight for the right to contribute to sustainable forest management, invest in conservation and support development work.

Follow the event on Facebook and Twitter @RECOFTC, @BIGTreesProject and @rakkungbangkachao. Tell us your story through social media and use the hashtag #iamtheForest. Remember, the forest is everyone's, and forest protection begins with you.
